ANZ Senior Economist, Adelaide Timbrell, commented:

Average confidence for May 2023 (76.8) was the weakest calendar-month average since December 1990, as cost-of-living pressure continues to impact households. The weekly result was the fifth worst since January 2020 and represented the 13th consecutive week below 80. Confidence about current financial conditions fell the most during the week and was at its second-weakest point since the beginning of 2020 (first-weakest being earlier in May 2023). Those paying off their homes still have far lower average confidence than renters and outright owners, despite housing prices lifting since mid-February.
